An Artist's Unlikely Journey

By Fred Jones

Seldom has the Montgomery Museum in Christiansburg generated as much buzz as with the upcoming exhibit by emerging artist Nick Vitelli running from Jan. 7 through Feb. 28.

Vitelli, of Christiansburg, took both the top prize and the people's choice award in Blacksburg's New River Art Biennial in October, beating out over 70 artists and 211 artworks. There was a time this success was hard for Vitelli to imagine.

Vitelli's first introduction to art was similar to that of many children. "My mom would always color with me and I thought how great that was." However, beyond those early experiences, he showed little aptitude or interest in art. He was home-schooled until he entered high school where he struggled with academics.

"I had some challenges with what people might say were learning disabilities," said Vitelli. Guidance counselors tried to convince him that college was not in his future. Fortunately, he attended Brevard High School in Transylvania County, N.C., where they allowed students a large degree of flexibility in selecting their courses. His sophomore year, on a whim, he took art and discovered he was good at it and enjoyed it. "From that point on I took every art class they would allow me to take all the way to Advanced Placement."

Due in large part to his art courses, Vitelli's grade point average was high enough to get him accepted at Queens University in Charlotte, N.C. "It was not an art school," recalls Vitelli, "but it was a victory because I was not even supposed to get into college." While he enjoyed art, at this stage of his life Vitelli's true passion was soccer. He had been the starting goalie for the varsity team beginning as a freshman in high school and at one point played on five different teams. "My life revolved around soccer."

team I probably would have finished school there and never pursued art," said Vitelli. Instead, he left after the first year and moved to the New River Valley to be near his sister and a minister he knew from church camp.

"I took two years off and worked painting houses and doing plumbing," said Vitelli. "In my spare time I continued to draw." Eventually he enrolled at New River Community College with the goal of transferring to another school for an art degree. He was told that if he was serious about art he should apply to high profile art schools. Instead, he visited the art department at Virginia Tech in 2008.

"The day I walked into the VT art department, art professor Robert Graham happened to be there. I talked to him for a while and I got the sense he really cared," recalled Vitelli. "I realized even if they didn't have the greatest funding or facilities, it's really about the teachers and what you get out of it and I'm really happy I went there." It was a good decision. Vitelli graduated magna cum laude from Virginia Tech in 2011 with a B.F.A. in studio arts.

Much of his success as an artist Vitelli attributes directly to his background as an athlete. "Soccer helped me understand about personal growth. I challenge myself in art just as I did on the field. I've learned never to get too comfortable and take the easy road out. If I ask myself 'what if' I don't hesitate to try it." He feels some of his best work has resulted from such experimentation. Sports also taught him the importance of discipline.

His winning piece in the New River Art Biennial, the portrait titled "Cuba," is steeped in discipline. At 26 by 40 inches, it took close to 140 hours to complete. Few artists would attempt a piece this large with even fat pastel sticks or paints. Astoundingly, he employed his favorite medium: colored pencils. "I told myself no one else works this large in colored pencil so why can't I challenge myself to do it? Eventually I want to complete a piece 40 by 60 inches if I can find the right paper that size."

Vitelli's favorite model for his portraits is his beautiful wife of three years, Crystal. "She is my most amazing asset as an artist. Not only is she my muse, she has a brilliant business mind and helps promote my career from that angle." His studio walls are, however, dominated by portraits of old men. "I have looked at a lot of faces and I see them differently than most people. It is more interesting to look at and work on older faces."

"Cuba" began as simply a drawing exercise. As Vitelli continued, he recognized its potential and the need for permission to show the work in public. "I contacted the photojournalist, Marlon Krieger, who captured this image while in Cuba," Vitelli recounts. "Krieger was walking down a back street and noticed a man sitting in his

During open tryouts for the Queens soccer team Vitelli met with disaster. "I got sick prior to the tryouts and had a hard time playing." It greatly affected his ability to play and he was not selected for the squad. In hindsight, he feels it was a blessing. "Who's to say, but if I had made the

A word from the president

By Gerri Young

Here it is, my second official day in office, and my mind is half "heavens, what have I done?" and half "OK, time to make some good things happen for BRAA." I chose to focus on the OK part!

In the 2013 annual meeting last November, the decent-sized group of members in attendance made the 2014 slate of officers final. One thing very important to me as the new president of BRAA was to have a strong group share the lead. The folks who volunteered to serve with me are just perfect.

We have Charlotte Chan and Teri Hoover as co-vice presidents. As such, they are in charge of programming and have stepped out smartly with two exciting events already in planning. Charlotte is handling a colored pencil workshop taught by new member, Jennifer Carpenter, of Christiansburg. She is a superb artist and experienced teacher. Find her at JPCarpenter on Facebook. The class should take place late February/early March and last two to three days. More information coming soon.

Teri happens to be married to Charles "Chuck" Hoover, president of Hoover Color Corp. in Hiwassee, Va. When I first asked Teri "what does your husband do?" she answered, "makes color." That immediately got my interest and led to his name going on our list of interesting events to plan for this year. Chuck has agreed to do a presentation for us in the next few months and I think his high energy and depth of knowledge about the making of color will be of interest to a large number of artists and anyone handling paint. More details will be coming soon, but you can read about the company at <http://www.hoovercolor.com>.

Jeanette Bowker has taken on the treasurer duties and moved forward smartly with the help of Bill Pulley, soon to be BRAA member and proficient user of Microsoft Excel, and Nancy Norton, interim treasurer following the stepping down of Vikki King. Bill set up an automated accounting spreadsheet for Jeanette to use and she has jumped right into it. A full treasurer's report will be coming out soon.

Fred Jones is our new secretary. You can see from his wonderful article in this newsletter that Fred is quite comfortable as a writer and will do a fine job with minutes.

Tom Barnhart will continue to do his excellent job as membership chairman and Lois Stephens will continue to be our wonderful editor of the newsletter. Charlotte and Jeanette make up the new committee for the community gallery program for 2014.

I would like to thank all the outgoing officers: Robi Sallee, Nancy Norton, Danie door stoop. The photographer gestured to his camera and the man nodded consent. After the photo the man nodded and smiled. No words were ever spoken and the encounter took just seconds." Just as the unknown man granted Krieger permission, so did Krieger give Vitelli all rights to use the photo for artistic reference.

Vitelli has set two goals for his career. The first he calls his practical goal—to teach art at the college level. "I would love to help people with art because I have seen how it can change lives; particularly for people who might struggle with academics." To reach that goal he will apply to graduate programs next year. The second goal he terms his lofty goal—to become an artist represented in museums. With the discipline he applies to every challenge he sets for himself, this goal appears not so lofty at all.

His prize-winning "Cuba" has been entered in an international exhibit. Should it not be accepted it will be included in Vitelli's upcoming show at the Montgomery Museum and the public is invited to meet the artist at a reception, Thursday, Jan. 9 from 5 to 7 p.m.

If a walk through Nick Vitelli's studio is any indication, this is an exhibit not to be missed, with or without "Cuba." ■

Janov and Vikki King for their dedication and service. I will be calling on their experience as I feel my way as your new president.

On my agenda as president, you will find some changes. First of all, board meetings will be held outside of the monthly luncheons to give them both the attention they deserve. Our bylaws require board meetings to be held a minimum of bi-monthly or more frequently at the president's discretion. For starters, I envision one a month for several months and, as things settle down, move to bi-monthly. Meeting announcements will be made to the general membership by email and any interested parties are welcome to attend.

The monthly luncheons will stay on schedule at Famous Anthony's where they take good care of us. They recently installed a monitor to which we can hook laptops for use in presentations and Art Spots, so the room has turned out to be a good location. The Art Spot feature, suggested by Danie Janov, is very successful so we will definitely continue them. If you are interested in presenting one, just let me know.

The board will be looking at all aspects of BRAA with an eye toward improving, streamlining and examining ways to increase revenue, attract new members and increase visibility and name recognition.

BRAA has made some forward strides in the last couple of years. It is my hope to continue that trend. To do that, I need your help. I encourage you to invest your energy and ideas to the good of BRAA to make it the best it has ever been. Together we can do great things!

Your partner in art,
Gerri Young, President ■
